Anti-Soviet demonstrators destroy Brezhnev effigy

by Steven Yudin

More than 200 demonstrators braved chilling winds on Saturday to march down St. Catherine Street in protest of the Russian invasion of Afghanistan.

Chanting "A bas l'impérialisme soviétique" and "Long live the Afghan freedom fighters" the demonstrators made their way to the Aeroflot building on University Street. As the crowd milled in front of the Russian airline building, two protesters carried an effigy of Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev up the steps. The marchers surrounded the effigy and began beating it with sticks until the head came off.

The march, co-sponsored by the Free Afghan Action Committee and the Afghanian Residents of Montreal, was the second demonstration in as many weeks.

ARM spokesperson Homayon or Samey said that more than 5,000 leaflets had been distributed to supportive passersby. Samey says the group is planning future demonstrations in Ottawa.

Samey compared the invasion to previous Soviet incursions into Hungary and Czechoslovakia. He sees the Russian action as the first step in a Soviet drive into the Persian Gulf.

A group of non-aligned nations have introduced a motion in the United Nations General Assembly calling for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanian soil. Samey says that as many as 150 countries are prepared to support this resolution.

Another marcher, an Afghanian who has been living in Montreal for three years, plans to leave Tuesday to join the fighting. Hoayon Gardezy said that he decided to go "immediately after the invasion began. My first thought was for my country."

Gardezy has military training but has never fought before.

"I believe we can win the war if the countries of the world back us up," he said, appearing to look forward to joining his countrymen.

The group claims that 25,000 Afghans have been massacred to date, the majority of these being women and children. The committees are calling upon the Canadian government to retaliate by withdrawing its ambassador from Moscow and cutting off all trade links with the U.S.S.R.

Samey has yet to make direct contact with the federal authorities. The ARM spokesperson said: "I'm sure they know about it (the demands). They didn't move yet - I haven't seen any reaction."

A member of the FAAC, which consists of non-Afghanian supporters, says he is a socialist from India. He insists that political differences have been put aside for the common cause.

The two groups intend to set up a fund in order to provide medical and food aid to the thousands of Afghanian refugees.

Response to the demonstration was not totally appreciative. One passerby opposed the principle of such manifestations. "If I was one of them, I'd get a gun and go over there and do something," he said.

Another spectator was sympathetic, but pessimistic. "If the Russians are pushed out, then the Americans will take over," he predicted. "The smaller countries always suffer."

Referendum committee plans big week

by Harold Koblin

The upcoming federal election has forced the McGill referendum committee to modify its plans for a pre-referendum blitz, said committee chairperson Paul Smith.

In an interview with the Daily Sunday, Smith said: "The election forced a lot of speakers to cancel and has taken a lot of attention away from the referendum debate. What we're doing instead is an intensive extensive speakers program."

"Initially the blitz was going to be limited to four weeks. Now we're planning things over a longer period, possibly with less events per week."

Highlighting this week's presentation will be a speech Wednesday by Jean Luc Pepin, former solicitor general and co-chairperson of the Task Force on Canadian Unity.

The committee is also planning to hold two debates on the upcoming referendum. On Thursday, Canadian Bar Association President Gordon Henderson and Senator Henry Hicks will debate Daniel Latouche, the PQ's constitutional consultant, and David Levine, the PQ candidate in D'Arcy McGee.

Friday, Liberal MNA Reed Scowen will debate Henry Milner, a political science teacher and chairperson of the Committee of Anglophones for Sovereignty-Association (CASA) on the comparative merits of sovereignty-association and renewed federalism.

According to Barbara Jenkins, a member of the referendum committee, the "committee is working very hard to ensure that both sides of the debate are covered."

"We're trying to get input from various groups, and not just from the provincial liberals and the PQ," she said.

Benefit a success

by Rosemary Oliver

An enthusiastic crowd of more than 1,300 packed St. Patrick's Cathedral Saturday night to raise over $10,000 at the McGill Faculty of Medicine benefit for Southeast Asian refugees.

The benefit which featured dancers from Les Ballets Jazz de Montréal, the National Ballet of Canada and the Tudor Singers of Montreal easily sold out the 1,200-seat capacity cathedral and left hundreds of the mostly middle-aged audience standing in the aisles for the performances.

Christopher Linstrom, President of the McGill Faculty of Medicine Refugee Fund, opened the evening's program. "You can choose to light a candle, or curse the darkness," Linstrom said. "The performers here tonight and you have chosen to light a candle."

"We will not solve the problems of the people of Vietnam tonight, but if we can help just one person, or maybe one family, that will be a tremendous achievement."

The proceeds from the benefit will be administered by the Quebec Committee to Aid Southeast Asian Refugees. This committee distributes funds for sponsorship of Vietnamese "boat people" and channels aid for Cambodian refugees through Thailand.

The program opened with musical selections by the Tudor Singers of Montreal and Victoria Grof of the New York City Opera Company. The second half consisted of dancing presentations by soloists from Les Ballets Jazz de Montréal and the National Ballet of Canada. The program closed with a pas de deux by Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn, both of the National Ballet of Canada, and winners of the first prize in the pas de deux category at the 1973 Moscow International Ballet Competition.

A team is born as Martlets toddle past Con, 84-63

by Brahm Pascal

Nine months. Summer, fall and winter. For the embryonic Martlets, a few zillion hours of post-ups, two-three zones and running laps, all ordered from the capable mouth of coach Hubert Lacroix. Friday night at Concordia General Gym, the Martlets were born, so to speak, but to the horror of eight hundred onlookers, they did not respond to the doctor's first slap. Hubert Lacroix, the father, je t'accuse! Thankfully the child survived to maturity and walloped the Concordia Stingerettes 84-63.

For the first five minutes of their QUAA life, the Martlets lay prostrate as the older, wiser Stingerettes beat up on them for a 12-2 lead. No, it needn't have happened. Lacroix withheld the answer from his waifs, leaving them defenceless until he called his second and last timeout of the first half with 14:14 to play.

Plainly, Lacroix had seen enough. One minute earlier, electric guard Annie Constantinides entered the game in place of Marie-Josée Houde. And now, in the second huddle, he whispered, "Annie, I am curious Yellow." Waaaah, look out Stingerettes!

Sprinkle a bit of Constantinides into the McGill mix and you've got a percolating offence. Two steals by the former Greek national teamer brought the Martlets to 6-12 and two Concordia turnovers on half-court traps left the Martlets within four at 14-18 and closing quickly.

At 8:47, after Houde stole the ball and landed a three point play, the Martlets led for good, 21-18. The women simply went gaga with their trap.

"It was about time," said a relieved Lacroix. "I was scared there. It was 12-2 when we woke up and played ball. The 1-2-1 'Yellow' trap brought us back into the game."

Learn this much about the young Martlets: like the fish in water, they swim when they run, and like the fish out of water...well, that was to be proved the next night against Bishop's.

Annie spurred the team with ten steals and was the lead attacker on the half-court ambushes. Center Linda Schaapman clawed the rebounds, forward Coleen Dufresne found a soft spot for 10 first half points and Houde lowered her shoulder and blasted away at the Stingerette defence.

Although it did not appear as such at times, there was a method to the Martlets offensive mayhem. They controlled the game the rest of the way with a slight lapse in the final five minutes. The half-time score was 42-36 McGill, and celebrating the arrival of the second half, they exploded in a 26-10 spree that buried the Stingerettes.

Concordia forward Linda Macpherson was deadly accurate in the first half for 13 points but tanked it in the second as her team lapsed heavily.

The fish theory could not be disproved on Friday night but that didn't faze Lacroix.

"If I can run like that for 40 minutes, I'll take it. I'd rather do that any day of the week."

Martlet forward Johane Poupore-Boileau was on for 11 from the field but she grabbed three rebounds on defence and five on offence, and did a fine job containing Macpherson.

"Bucky" Bourque's 23 point performance had to be some consolation to her screaming and kicking Con head coach Mike Hickey, although the fact that she and Macpherson scored 40 of the Stingerette total 63 was not.

On their tote sheet, the Martlets highlighted five players in double figures, Houde and Constantinides with 18 points apiece, and Schaapman and Dufresne with 16 and 14 respectively.

"We are not a set team," Lacroix explained. "We like to get a lot of people involved in the action."

In time, and given Lacroix' blessing, the Martlets came of age on Friday. A very mellow yellow.

Martlets wish they had never met Bish in 83-41 wipeout

by Brahm Pascal

Why is there such a bountiful market for shows like "Great teams, Great seasons" or the nostalgic "The Way It Was"? Doesn't anyone care about the ungreat teams who endured abysmal years, or hearing about the way we wish it was? If you do, or know of anyone who might enjoy that pursuit, then pull up a chair and listen while host Yogi Studebaker relives the 1980 basketball game between the Bishop's Galterettes and McGill Martlets, truly a loathsome day in sport for the Martlets, 83-41 losers.

Let Galterette coach Wayne Hussey set the emotional scene for you, fans: "We wanted to win this one badly because we only beat them by five at the Carleton tournament. Some people were saying that we were only five points better than McGill."

Hussey certainly proved his point, but the Martlets are definitely not 42 points worse than the second-ranked Galterettes. For the first four and a half minutes, McGill was only one point behind Bish at 2-1, and playing tenacious defence. But the Martlet offence was just gosh-awful. Clearly the shooters went AWOL and the team was at a loss to do something about it.

Guard Deb Huband, a Bishop's Olympian, rolled over the dispirited Martlets and her teammates followed in the blitz. They ran like fillys, and most importantly, made the Martlets play the set offence, which was not very polite of coach Hussey. He was at the Concordia game the previous evening and saw the Martlets reliance on the running game.

"If you look at their schedule," he remarked, "there are a few weak teams in there so they've probably been allowed to run."

Generally, the Martlets were as exciting as watching paint dry. The game brought to mind the archaic question of whether 'tis better to lose by 50 than to lose by two in the last second.

"I wasn't really upset because nobody played well," remarked Martlet forward Coleen Dufresne. "We know we can play so much better."

"We shot 29%! You can't win a ball game like that."

Unfortunately, the Galterettes didn't shoot 28%. Five players handled scoring 72 of the 83 Bish points. Forward Connie Classen led the quintet with 22 points, followed by Huband with 20 and Sue Hylland, Maria Bobyn and Diane Murphy hitting for ten each.

"Our starting players hardly played tonight," Hussey pointed out. "That's where we have an advantage over other teams."

As an eminently forgettable Martlet game, the evening was a gala occasion. McGill made a neat presentation of the Galterettes' twenty-second straight win without a defeat. And let's face it, nothing could ever match this dud.

Alumni settle for 6-6 tie with Redmen

by Carl Heine

The Alumni game was expected to be good fun and clean hockey and that's what it was. This was partially due to several minor alterations in the rules, such as making shooting on goal a two-minute penalty. The other factor was the absence of body contact as the two teams showed their respect for each other.

The first period was a little lopsided as the alumni tried to put individual skill into teamwork. Both teams showed a lot of hustle but teamwork gave the Redmen a 3-0 lead for the first period. The first two goals were by the Redmen captain and game MVP Ken Covo. The third goal was by Carlo Command on a good assist by Cary Mann.

Less than two minutes into the second period Alumni MVP Whitey Schutz put the old-timers on the scoreboard. The Redmen came back with a goal by Mann on a pretty passing play. The second period went to the Alumni who put in three more goals in to tie the score at 4-4. Last year's coach Herb Madill scored two and Steve Mitchell scored the third. The Alumni had coordinated their skill and took advantage of the Redmen weak points due to injury. Along with several others, the Redmen star goalie Mr. X sat out the game with a bad ankle but it was nice to see Rich Kila back from his injury of several months ago.

In the third period referee Al Smith and linesmen Dick Irvin and Principal Johnston decided to get into the fun. They sent players to the box for everything from not back-checking (Herb Madill) to being the captain (Ken Covo). There was some seriousness to the period as Mann scored for the Redmen and as Bill Hozack scored for the Alumni.

The score held for 12 minutes until the alumni scored and left only 40 seconds on the clock. Not to be outdone, Redman Pat Shannon scored the final goal with only 18 seconds left. The game ended 6-6 and in total chaos. Both teams emptied their benches for a grand finale of free skating.

The senior player of the game, Alumni MVP Whitey Schutz, explained his success saying, "Attribute it to longevity." Dr. Schutz graduated from McGill dentistry in 1955. Although his age slowed him down, the grace and style still remained.

When asked to comment on the game, temporary Alumni coach Ken Tyler simply said, "McGill won and I get two points, one for the Redmen and one for the Alumni."

Principal Johnston, who worked the lines along with Dick Irvin, seemed very pleased with the game. He expressed his desire to make the Alumni game an annual one and hoped that many people would come out to see excellent hockey. I leave with his quote, "Justice was done tonight, a six-all tie."

Concordia and Bishop's mug Redmen

by Brahm Pascal

Ripley's "Believe It or Not" tells us that a basketball team once went flat when it was left in the fridge overnight with the cap off. "Tales of the Bizarre" takes you to the Concordia and Currie Gymnasium where the McGill Redmen played frigid and lacklustre basketball in a 73-64 loss to rival Concordia and an 82-54 humiliation at the toes of the Bishop's Gaitsers.

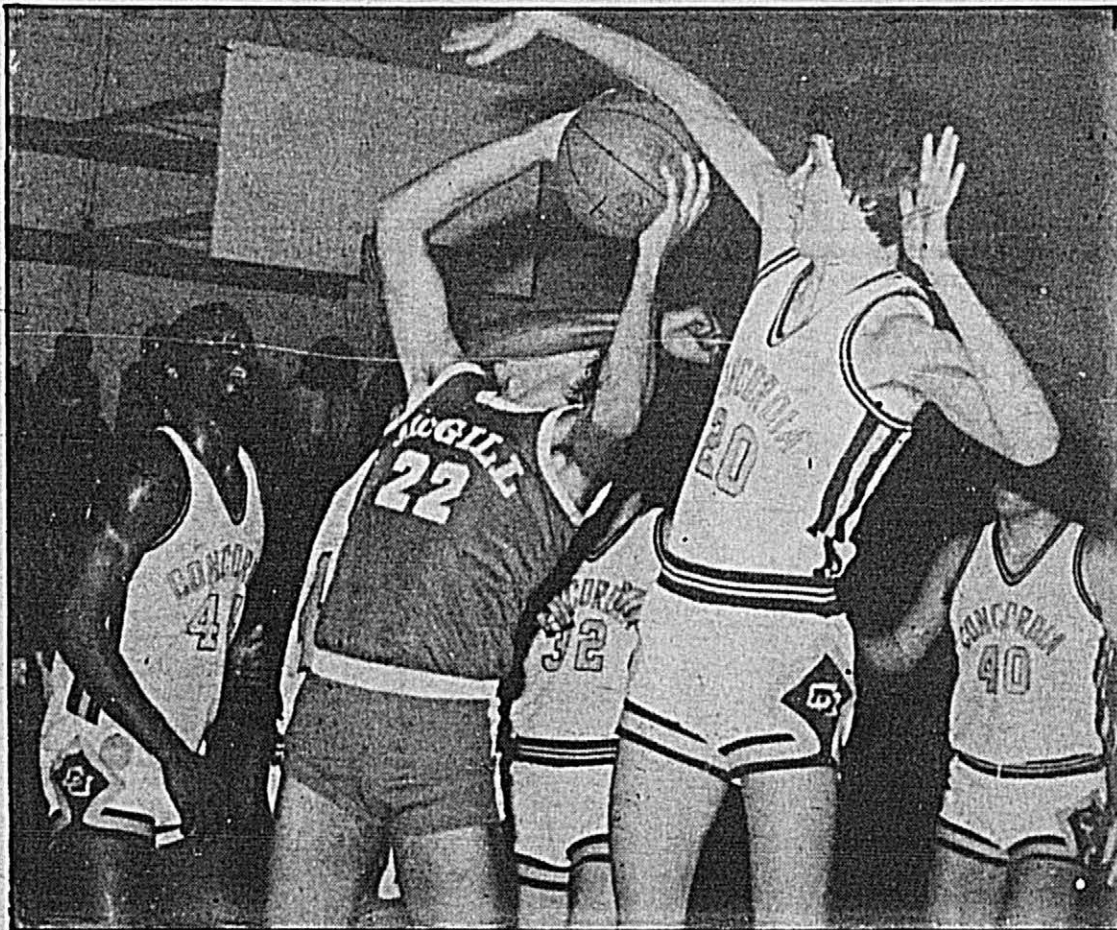

Over one month ago, the Redmen won a game at the Husson Tournament in Maine, and not since. Losing may build character but enough is enough.

At Concordia, McGill plugged and popped and kept within shooting range of the Stingers throughout the first half. Forward Mark Adillman was the bellweather with his soft touch and ten points.

The game was a chippy one as evinced by the battle between Con guard Doug Whaley and McGill's Neil Tolchinsky. Thanks to the imposing presence of center Leon Bynoe, the middle seemed to be a netherworld for the Redmen.

"They've gotta be scared of me," Bynoe elaborated after the game. "They know that if they shoot I'll block it or there won't be a rebound." Bynoe's self-assessment was quite flattering, but everyone on the court knows that Lee is there.

Con led at halftime 36-29 but the real sense of this game was captured at 15:11 of the second half when the Redmen miraculously tied the game at 38. Adillman hit two jumpers and forward Kevin Dogen hit a free throw. Still, there was no zip tot he comeback, no feeling of McGill momentum. Indeed, Stingers Gary McKelgan and Rich Hagens made two quick hoops to dash hopes of a McGill lead.

Stinger coach Doug Daigneault called a timeout after the Redmen tied the game and he later said, "I told them we better start to run because we ran kind of a walker for a few minutes."

Adillman led Redmen scorers with a game-high 22 points, while Bynoe had 20 in an exemplary all-around effort.

Tolchinsky scored 6 points but Whaley had only 14, as much a tribute to Tolchinsky's defence as his battered elbows and body. Asked about Whaley's unique hacksaw defence, coach Butch Staples replied, "Whaley's got a knife but Neil has a gun."

Heading into the Bishop's game Staples felt that, "We had some bad moments no doubt, and we weren't ver poised at times, but we made correctable mistakes."

Saturday night was the nadir of the season. The grueling nature of the Con game took something out of the players but they lacked the emotional drive tomake up for it. Bishop's Trevor Bennett, a man in search of an all-star selection (and deserving it), floated over the Redmen with his jumpers from the foul line and one spectacular slashing cut to the basket for a slammo.

"I had sparkles in my eyes when I saw that ball loose," he recalled. "I'm a dunk freak."

That pretty much sums up the Gaitsers story as they ran away from the Redmen and never looked back.

What is paramount here is that the Redmen have gone without a win since December 1. Rick Rusk, the center counted on for scoring, potted nine points in two games, only one in the Bish game. No one has asserted himself as a leader and the team has not played they game it should since the first game of the Redmen Invitational in November.

"That's the thing in sports," explained assistant Eddie Pomykala. "When you have a grasp of being successful you do the right things and play with intensity. We've got to get over the hump and out of the losing column."

"We're not measuring up to what we're supposed to be," said Staples, who has had some losing teams in his years at McGill. "Even when we didn't have good teams they measured up."

"It's a crisis of some sort and the only thing that's gonna cure it is a win," Pomykala concluded.
